

Nomadic Life by Bike

From the Swiss Alps to the Southern Alps

Céline and Xavier are modern-day nomads who left Switzerland on August 1, 2010 to reach New Zealand on their bicycles -except for the necessary boat or airplane. Five years and a baby later, with more than 50,000 km on their bikes since they left Europe, they have finally reached New Zealand and feel that what started as a project has become their way of life.

Please join us to find out more about their journey
